

Rezaul Karim is a Bangladeshi born Canadian. He has been actively involved in international health and development cooperation management since 1974. He has worked in Southeast Asian countries from 1974 to 1980 and in the Mekong countries since 1996. He specializes in participatory capacity building, program benefit monitoring and evaluation and in community based population health development work. He has a Master's in International and Population Planning (MPH) from University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, USA and another Master's in Social Welfare Administration (MA) from University of Dhaka, Bangladesh. In making development communication effective, he believes in combining modern communication technologies with local knowledge, local resources and institutions.